Hi! My name is Brenna Muldrow and I am a McDonough Peer Ambassador.

Hometown: Fayetteville, NC
Class: 2016
Major: Management and Marketing
Extracurricular Activities: Peer Ambassador, Georgetown Collegiate Investors, Army ROTC

Interesting Fact about Me: I’ll only eat grapes if they are frozen or dried. I refuse to eat them otherwise.

What made you choose Georgetown’s McDonough School of Business? I got the sense that McDonough had a strong focus on preparing you to have a successful career but also on preparing you as person who has to go out and be an adult. There’s a focus on who you are outside of the classroom, outside of your job or what you want to do professionally, a focus on how you intend to give back that was a real draw for me.

What are the best things about being a Hoya? Balance between hard work and fun, variety of things to be involved in on campus, diversity of experiences of the people you live and work with.

Why do you love D.C.? Why would I not love DC? The city itself is one of my favorite parts of being a Georgetown student. There’s always something to do and see. I can visit an island, eat food from around the world, and nurse my comic book obsession all in the same day, by hopping on the metro or the bus. I can run into celebrities/politicians (here’s looking at you Senator McCain and Steve Case) standing in the airport on my way home for Christmas break or eating in a restaurant. I love that I’m four years into my college experience and still exploring parts of DC that are unknown to me. I love that I can have an adventure just by picking a place on a DC map and choosing to spend a few hour walking around.

Share a defining and/or transformative classroom/educational moment? My defining moment was when I made the Dean’s List for the first time my fall semester of junior year after spending my first two years struggling academically. Making the Dean’s List, while taking 19 credits, was my reminder that sometimes it takes a little longer to find your footing, but that’s okay in the end.

What is your advice to incoming Hoyas? Something I learned during my first year at Georgetown that I would like to pass on to other incoming students is that it is normal okay to feel completely out of your depth when you get to Georgetown. That it’s okay that it’s a Friday night and you’re not going to a party or that you’re struggling to understand your professor’s lecture when everyone else around you seems to understand on the first try. College is a different environment, and you’ll be uncomfortable as you adjust. You’ll probably fail a test or a quiz and that’s okay. You’ll probably have to learn how to study. You’ll probably spend more time in your teacher’s offices trying to understand material than you ever thought you would. And that’s totally okay. And it may seem like adjusting is taking longer than it should but do things in your own time. Because when you finally get comfortable, everything will fall into place. . .
